keiko kurita photo exhibition 'innocent water'

at Reykjavik Museum of Photography (Reykjavik, Iceland)
12 March - 5 May 2009

Keiko Kurita is an emerging Japanese-based artist and photographer. Kurita's photo exhibition, 'innocent water,' is at SKOTID Reykjavik Museum of Photography on 12 March -5 May, 2009, subsidized by The Nomura Cultural Foundation.

Kurita has visited Iceland seven times during the summer and winter months between 2004-2008; 'innocent water' is a series of photographs depicting distinctively Icelandic winter scenes taken during that time. The surreal quiet of the landscape, the fragments of winter life such as swimming in pools of warm water sourced from natural hot springs, and strolling on frozen lakes portray warmth and beauty in an extremely cold world.

In this exhibition, Kurita shows 10 c-type Prints and a Book. The book is a photo narrative of 43 photographic images, which are also projected to the gallery's wall.

Kurita has another exhibition 4 April - 26 April 2009, at The ASI Art Museum. The exhibition titled 'tree/sleep,' also consists of 10 c-type prints. Kurita features green elements in 'tree/sleep,' creating a different color scheme than 'innocent water,' but still incorporating the same peculiar sensitive and strict transparency.
